The Office of Naval Research (ONR) has awarded GrammaTech, Inc. with a $9 million, three-year contract in support of protecting software from cyberattacks through the research and development of advanced methods. With this funding, GrammaTech will develop a system to improve upon the security and efficiency of existing software applications used within the U.S. Navy program through the advancement of tailoring such programs for specific situations. This system will utilize automation to remove irrelevant layers and features that would produce vulnerabilities. This article further discusses the development of this technology and how it will improve the security of software against cyberattacks.
